Literary clubs have all resumed study with a full corps of workers, many with increased membership. The majority have new officers, rotation in office being the prevailing custom. The Athenaeum is receiving many new and enthusiastic members twelve having been added during Ocober, and other clubs report demands for admission beyond their established limits. A broadening of club life other than the mere expansion of numbers has been noted for the past two years, the clubs delighting to entertain each other and inviting the husbands and brothers, who find themselves toasted-not roasted. An open day was given by the Athenaeum, on October 14 r the discussion of "The Alms and Methods of the Large Club." To-morrow afternoon all presidents of federated clubs as invited to a council to be held in the Athenaeum rooms to consider the general an elegant luncheon Friday afternoon, Oc-plan of the state convention of clubs to be tober 30, which was a most enjoyable af-held here in January. From the New York World.

By the side of a tiny switch shed near the New York & Lake Eric railroad freight depot sits every day Patrick Moloney, the oldest railroad switch tender in the world. For more than half a century he has moved in and out of that box setting and shifting the switches for the thousand engines that pass and repass him every day. In 1899 Patrick Moloney will be 100 years old. He was born with the century, he is is invited to be present.

bent figure of this old fellow standing stationary and immovable amid the changes of life one may see epitomized the history of lifty-six years. In that time he has seen the New York & Lake Erie road develop from a little double-track road, with shut-tle engines and a run of forty miles, to the great system it now is; he has seen presidents, secretaries and boards come and go and live their day and die and be tten-but he has remained; he has seen Jersey City grow from a little hamlet city of to-day.

"You wonder why it is that I haven't lost my brains and that I can turn a switch. old as I am," he says. "The surest cut to old age is to take life as one finds it, and don't be ambitious, don't be always trying to get ahead in the race. If I h to be anything else but a switchman I wouldn't be alive and hearty to-day and likely to see a hundred years before I die. I began as a switchman. I was content to be the best switchman on the road—that's what they used to call me-and let others do the striving and pushing and crowding. And it ain't answered so badly after all. Here I am at 97, with a daughter to look and enough to bury me.

"Laws, it's funny to look at that road now," he continued, "and think of what it was when I first came here. Seems to me as if it had turned itself over three times or more. I was five years up at Plermont before they got that tunnel through and shifted their depot down here. Old John der, and a fine man he was, but he's dead this forty years. S. C. Seymour, the first superintendent, too, a big fellow as stood six feet five inches in his stockings-funny to thing of his being dead and gone, too, and me left. It's funny to think of some of the things that have happened while I've been sitting here turning them switches How many presidents have there been? don't know. I can remember some.
